Studies with Dr. Bruce Berkowsky

Dr. Bruce Berkowsky's NHSS™ Diploma Studies will continue with session three December 1-3. We will be relocating the training in LaConner, WA, because we are outgrowing the small classroom at Samara Botane. Session three will cover ten more essential oils within the sixty Dr. Berkowsky uses in his Materia Medica, and the theme will revolve around Homeopathy and Cancer. Each of the six sessions are designed to be either attended singularly as an intensive, or as a component part of the segmented Diploma Program.

This exciting aromatherapy training is intended to enable practitioners to integrate aromatherapy as a highly specific role player into a multi-dimensional therapeutic protocol in which the framework is derived from an integration of neuroendocrine physiology, anthroposophical medicine, classical homeopathy, Chinese Medicine, traditional Naturecure, Applied Kinesiology and the spiritual aspects of the Kabbalah. Dr. Berkowsky's unique NHSS (Natural Health Science System)™ Spiritual Phytoessence Program teaches practitioners how to 'see a case' by penetrating the complex layers of presenting symptoms to reveal the individual at the core. This system is not directed at superficial symptomatic amelioration, but rather at working fundamentally upon the individual and the deeper patterns that block individual growth.

Each of the six-part sessions incorporates reiteration of the basic concepts and expands upon a particular theme, which presents the detail of each integrated theory. Each session will cover ten essential oils in depth and students will observe Dr. Berkowsky in the art of case-taking and interpretation, so that students gain an understanding of how to elicit the information needed to address underlying patterns of neuro-hormonal dysregulation.

Throughout the training, Dr. Berkowsky conveys how to identify the central psychospiritual themes that run through a case, and how to translate these themes into essential oil selections.

For a brochure and registration information, please call the Samara Botane main office at 800.782.4532 or 206.282.4532 locally.

Essential Oils From New Zealand & Australia: Blue Cypress (Callitris intratropica)

Most of us are familiar with tea tree essential oil (Melaleuca alternifolia). Australia also brings us other aromatic signatures reminiscent of Australia's great outdoors, and some with qualities not widely noted.

One essential oil obtained from sustainable plantations is the rare, azure-blue essential oil of the ancient southern Conifer Callitris intratropica and marketed as Blue Cypress Oil. Deep blue, with a subtle woody fragrance, Blue Cypress contains the important fragrance components geranyl acetate, b-caryophyllene and limonene, as well as the guaiazulene that presents its superb deep blue color. The oil's distinctive woody fragrance is modified by floral notes and a slight spice tang.

The Blue Cypress is native to wetter areas in the arid upper portion of the Northern Territory, where the tree's bark and resins have long been used by Australia's native peoples, The Tiwi, to treat skin lesions and stomach upsets. Early empirical evidence indicates the essential oil would be of use in treating warts and viral infections, and it appears to offer anti-inflammatory qualities.

A number of hair care and cosmetic companies in the USA and Europe are finding Blue Cypress to be a 'magical' ingredient for use in perfumes, fragrances and personal care products.

Although Callitris intratropica is comparatively rare in its natural habitat, it is found growing in sustainable plantations. When burned, the undistilled wood gives off a very distinctive and fragrant aroma.

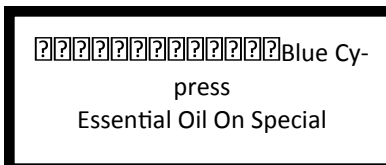

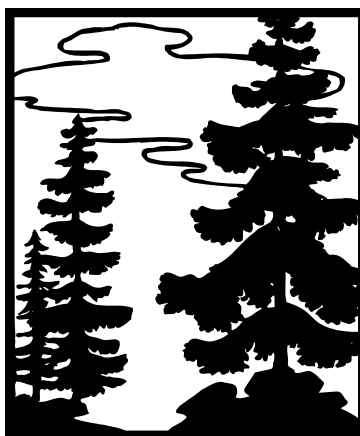

Suggestions for Perfumery and Fragrance Use

Oil of Callitris intratropica is similar in some ways to Sandalwood Essential Oil (Santalum album), West Indian Sandalwood Essential Oil (Amyris balsamifera) and essential oil of Guaiac Wood (Bulnesia sarmienti), as well as essential oil of Vetiver (Vetiveria zizanioides). Each of these have woody/floral/smoky notes and good fixative properties.

Features of Blue Cypress Essential Oil

1. Superb azure-blue color: The color gives manufacturers and formulators an added bonus, that of natural colorants.
2. Appealing scent: The overall effect is that of a long-lasting, warm, woody fragrance. The result is distinctive enough to establish its own reputation, while still blending well with other essences. It blends especially well with citrus oils, lavender and other floral oils.
3. Eco-harmony: It is only harvested and distilled from plantation-grown trees, therefore the natural ecology of the country is not disturbed by taking trees from the wild.
4. Social Responsibility: The Australian indigenous Tiwi people are direct beneficiaries of sales of all Blue Cypress Oil produced by the producers that supply Samara Botane.

Other Essential Oils From Australia: - Rosalina

In his book, NATURAL HOME HEALTH CARE USING ESSENTIAL OILS, Dr. Daniel Penoel highly recommends Rosalina (Melaleuca ericifolia) as specific for upper respiratory problems, especially for children. This exceptionally gentle oil from the Melaleuca family is especially high in linalo-ol (35-55%), making it a relaxing addition to the whole body massage or bath as a single essential oil and is a primary use in insomnia and for those who need deep sleep and relaxation. A wonderful addition to the natural medicine chest, Rosalina in combination with other gentle anti-infectious essential oils can be a wonderful way to help children overcome common colds and influenza. Rosalina is so gentle, it can be used in face lotions. For a full body massage, dilute approximately ten drops in 30 ml of carrier.
